Technological advancement have opened up new avenues for employment opportunities, trade and business.

On the other side, issues like corruption, crime against women, mounting inequality and poverty have become rampant and appear as the stumbling block. Regionalism, casteism, communalism are on rise with a fiercing mood. Such a contradictory & paradoxical situation of the country demands serious attention. Contemporary Indian society and its working is extremely complex and fascinating. It is an amalgam of tradition and modernity with multiplicity of culture, tradition, language etc.

Under such conditions the need arises to provide a new way of thinking about the range of 21st-century issues in India and how to respond and deal them.
